

and indeed was viewed by those well acquainted with him as entirely ignorant of the profession Your petitioner expressly states that she found all the representations he had made respecting his property his standing and practice were basely false fraudulent and deceitful and were made for the purpose of deceiving your petitioner Your petitioner further states that his habits were of the most unlucky and immoral character that after the last arrival at Hamburg he continued to drink to the greatest excess that he was continually intoxicated and incapable of attending to any kind of business and indeed did not pretend to do any thing or make the least provision for their support but gave himself up entirely to intemperance That as soon as ^{he} rose in the morning he would go off and get drunk return home throw himself down on the floor or any where else and fall a sleep and when he awoke would abuse his aged Mother and the family and on a short time would return to the tippling shops and again
